Message from Editor

It is the moment of immense pleasure to have published this inaugural issue of JCMC (journal of Chitwan Medical College). I am very thankful to all contributors of this journal for their invaluable support.

The main aim of establishment of Chitwan School of Medical sciences (CSMS) is to provide quality medical education to its students as well as to provide quality medical service of national and international standard to its patients. We are proud of our expert medical professionals and teachers working in our college to achieve this goal. We expect them to be able to take time out of their busy clinical schedule to compile and analyze their daily clinical experiences and express them in words in the form of scientific data and communicate the results to their colleagues by publishing them in scientific journals.

Knowledge is constantly growing in our world. The concept taken to be perfect yesterday is no longer acceptable today in some fields due to rapid development of science. Specially, in the field of basic science every morning produces new findings. As new developments become available, improvements in the treatment, procedures for operations, use of equipments and diagnostic agents and use of more potent drugs becomes possible. It becomes thus crucial for all clinicians to update oneself for more scientific methodology of treatment. So, academic discussions and collaborations are vital for the scientific growth for a clinician.

The journal of Chitwan Medical College (JCMC) has provided the platform through which the members can share their experiences with colleagues and discover their own potential qualities and talents. Our academicians are not new to such academic activities and it will be worthy to predict that this journal will continuously add significant impact on medical science in coming issues too.
